Monroe Doctrine Vital to Survival

formed the Monroe Doctrine "INTO A MAJOR NATIONAL POLICY, APPLAUDED IN THE NEW WORLD, RESPECTED IN THE OLD."

After World War I, Latin American nations began to demand, with increasing success, that the principles of the Monroe Doctrine be laid aside in favor of a system of so-called collective security. It was clear to this country that this so-called collective security would mean an end to the Monroe Doctrine. It would involve not only a surrender of our own right of self-defense but a surrender of our national sovereignty. We had refrained from joining the League of Nations, but now we were being asked to trust to a combination of Latin-American countries, critical decisions involving our national destiny.

At the Sixth International Conference of American States at Havana in 1928, the then Secretary of State, Charles Evans Hughes, clearly put forth the American viewpoint with reference to intervention. His words are even more telling today in regard to American lives, property and interests in Latin America. Secretary Hughes asked: 'What are we going to do when government breaks down and American citizens are in danger of their lives? Are we going to stand by and see them killed because a government can no longer afford reasonable protection?"

But the clear and constructive voice of Hughes was not to prevail in official Washington for long. In 1933 a new ideology proclaimed itself as the dominant force in government. The voices of Marxist internationalism were now the ones which spoke with authority. The late President Roosevelt chose as Secretary of State Cordell Hull, an ardent liberal who worshipped at the internationalist shrine of the late President Woodrow Wilson.

Worried Americans feared that the New Deal meant to bury the Monroe Doctrine and the principles for which it stood. It did not take long for their suspicion to be confirmed.

In September 1933, just six months after Roosevelt took office, revolution broke out in Cuba. A new regime took over in a spirit of violent anti-Americanism. Soon there began a series of seizures of American-owned power plants and sugar refineries, but no move was made by the new Administration to protect American lives and property. The long years of neglecting our own interests and the interests of freedom in Latin America had clearly begun.

In May 1934, with great speed and without a record vote, a new treaty with Cuba was pushed through the Senate. This new treaty surrendered time-honored and important American rights, including the right of intervention in behalf of our own interests, which we had maintained as a basic right and which was a part of the Cuban Constitution since that country's freedom from Spain.

To alien diplomats with a mature and realistic view of foreign relations, this must have seemed a very foolish move on our part. To surrender American rights necessary to maintain our nation's security in the Caribbean, must have seemed like a very misguided course of action to even the most friendly observers. But to Soviet Russia, already looking and planning in the direction of Latin America, it was much more than nonsense. It was a green light, a go signal for subversion and infiltration.

It is little wonder when Fidel Castro took over in Cuba in 1959 and began his bloodbath of mass murders and his looting and confiscation of American property, he could do so without worrying about the consequences. No doubt he had been told by his Communist advisors years before that Uncle Sam was now a paper tiger in the Caribbean, and that any petty despot could spread tyranny and revolution with a minimum of apprehension. For the fear was all on the part of the United States, or rather on the part of the misguided and mistaken officials who had been charting our Latin policy since the early 1930's.

Fearful officials, who were nothing but the dupes of Communist agents, had set the tone of our policies by spreading the line that we dare not act in our own interest lest we appear to be imperialistic. Since the advent of the Monroe Doctrine this country had been the protector and even the liberator of the peoples of Latin America. But in the maze of Communist agents and Socialistic propagandists, our position continued to deteriorate.

The enemy could see that we were not going to stand by the principles of the Monroe Doctrine and he was prepared to act accordingly. In the spirit of contempt which Nikita Khrushchev showed toward us when he saw us in a moment of indecision and moral weakness, he declared the Monroe Doctrine was dead and that it ought to be "buried as every dead body was so that it did not poison the air by its decay."

Today in Latin America there is decay in the atmosphere, the decayed philosophy of Communism which is being spread at a bold and steady pace by the foreign agents of the Moscow and Peking Communists. If these agents are allowed to go their subversive ways unchecked soon there will be more real estate than the island of Cuba to liberate.

If we want to reverse this tide of subversion sweeping back and forth to such a frightening extent below our borders, then we had best return to the spirit of the Monroe Doctrine, which clearly opposes alien intervention into the affairs of all nations in the Americas.

Castro-controlled Cuba has become the home office for the representatives of tyranny throughout Latin America. It is only common sense that, if we are to effectively aid the governments of South America in stopping this subversive flood, we must plug up the hole from which it comes. If we are going to begin successfully combatting the forces which directly threaten even our own nation's security, we must quarantine the Castro regime, so that its effectiveness as a base of subversion evaporates.

Of a certainty, Cuba today is a stronghold of alien enemy influence and foreign enemy subversion. It need not remain so if we will take the lead, in the spirit of our own Monroe Doctrine, and effectively blockade the Castro regime. This in turn will lead to the day, in the not too distant future, when this tyrant will be forced from power and the people of Cuba allowed to live under liberty. When that day arrives, it will mean much more than freedom for the Cuban people, it will mean that we have won true respect throughout Latin America and the world.

We will be compelled to act in defense of liberty sooner or later, but let it be sooner or it may turn out to be too late.

MORE GUNS . . . LESS CRIME

The strictest gun law in the world is in England, but since 1961, she has had the greatest per capita of homicides, mostly with knives and clubs; but in Switzerland, which has the lowest crime rate. all male citizens receive a gun at the age of nine and for their entire lifetime they must keep their guns in their homes ready for action.

and unproven policy of Internationalism. This is indeed a curious transposition. It is Russia which is supposed to be "Red," according to the mass media; but it is the U.S.A. which really follows a "Red" policy. Unless this curious ambiguity is eliminated from our national life, we foresee, by looking into our crystal ball, a series of huge mushroom clouds spreading across America. The fact is that the Jewish Establishment which rules this country today are such a consummate pack of bastards that the rest of the world will be unable to live with them, and we shall face a hostile military alliance composed of most of the rest of the world. If the disarmament quacks have their way, we shall also be disarmed when this happens. Then, Mister Average American, you have HAD IT! What can you do now? After careful consideration, we recommend space travel. Go to some other planet for a while. In a few years, it will be both safe and pleasant to return to planet earth. The population will be much reduced, so there will be more elbow room. The silly asses who conduct the earth's affairs today will be gone. Marxism will be gone. Russia will have settled down to practice Doestoevski's Christianity for a thousand years, just as Oswald Spengler predicted. What about America? If you wish to entertain any really solid and attainable hope for the future, you must observe a few basic rules of political sanity. Nobody in this country is doing so today!

Abolish the Federal Reserve

By A. J. PORTH
(Tax Consultant)

If all the currency in circulation consisted of United States Notes, there would be no Federal or State Income Tax. There would be no need for a gasoline or sales tax. Proof of this statement is a matter of record. No income tax existed before the passage of the Federal Reserve Act. (Dec. 23, 1913). Prior to that time there were no Federal Reserve Notes in circulation. Documentation will show that the need for revenue increased as the number of Federal Reserve Notes increased.

The Internal Revenue Service should be received and looked upon as an agency collecting accounts receivable for a private enterprise (Federal Reserve Banks). The employees are paid out of public funds.

Federal Reserve Banks buy a $10,000 Federal Reserve Note for the cost of paper and printing which has been estimated to be less than one penny. They loan this amount to the nation or to individuals at par. Is it any wonder that we are in debt and slaves to a dishonest money system? (See U.S.C. Title 12 ch. 3, Sec. 420).
